WHO NEEDS A PRINCE, WHEN YOU'VE GOT A HUNTSMAN?

Miss Nevara Wood is desperate to change her life. Plagued by shifting sight, which skews her normal vision and shows her disturbing visions, she's always felt odd and unlovable. And she greatly wants to be loved—especially by Mark Dimas, the man she has hero-worshiped since the day he saved her life. Her only chance at happiness lies in breaking the curse that afflicts her—and all clues to the source of her torment point to a town in Southern Spain. Unfortunately, her every attempt to travel to that war-ravaged continent is impeded by the very man whose love she wants to win . . .

Mark Dimas Alvaro is the last in a line of wizards charged by his ancestor, a magical huntsman, to secretly protect Nevara's family. But Mark chafes at his role because it has cost him everyone he loves, most recently his beloved brother. He is certain that if Nevara would simply stay in England and not create any unnecessary magical waves, they could both survive for another generation. Instead, his stubborn charge's persistent investigation into her past lands Nevara in imminent danger. Mark instantly prepares to wage a magical war to protect the woman he has sworn to protect . . . and has come to deeply love.

But Nevara's innocent probing has awoken an ancient evil that has held a grudge against her charmed family for three centuries. And it will do everything in its power to ensure that this princess never gets to live happily ever after . . .

I didn't even realize that this was inspired by Snow White's story until I progressed further into the book and found the references. However, Shereen did an amazing job weaving Snow White's story with her creation of the curse. Everything blended perfectly together and actually made sense - and the magical elements that she laced throughout the pages of the book was just fantastic. Nevara drew me to her character like a moth to a flame. She was very sweet with a streak of stubbornness that was actually pretty charming. I really enjoyed her; I found the fact that she was so averse to her gift quite sad, but celebrated with her when she finally realized what she could actually do and how she could use it. It was a very satisfying feeling to see her come into herself and discover who she really was as a person - inside and out.

Her relationship with Mark didn't seem too believable at first, but then again, Mark did quite a good job of hiding how he truly felt for her and despite the fact that he mentions it to the reader early on in the book, you don't quite believe it just yet. But he is amazing. And good, and kind - and an incredibly powerful wizard. His lighted netting around the boat that only Nevara could see with her gift was one of my favorite scenes in the book. Although I hated how he was being treated on the ship when suspicious eyes were cast on him.

The legend of the Huntsman and the story that surrounds it was enchanting. I found myself wishing on more than on occasion that it was true and the curse that followed Mark and his family around for years was pure genius. Shereen really did an amazing, wonderful job with this one. Also! How freaking awesome was Don Sabbio?

I really love any story that is inspired by a fairy tale but I had a hard time getting into this one. I didn't feel like the story flowed very nicely. It could be because I missed the first book in the series. The beginning of the story really dragged for me until it got past halfway, so that was disappointing. I really didn't feel the attraction between the two characters much. It seemed a bit forced to me. I did like reading about Mark powers and Nevara's skills, though. While I didn't absolutely love this one, that doesn't mean others would enjoy it.

I received a copy from Netgalley, to read and review.

Another great book in the series. Loved how all the history and facts finally came to light and tied in with current events.
